educational intelligence

message from the editor..

From time to time, an educational issue arises which is so contentious that it divides not only the teaching profession, but the general public too. One that really got everyone talking was the recent strike over pay: with nearly a third of schools across England and Wales affected, this story has rumbled on in the press for quite some time subsequently. The story was featured in Schoolzone's recently-launched Education News service, and you can read our Schoolzone editor's view on it by going to: <http://www.schoolzone.co.uk/feeds/DisplayItem.asp?ItemID=1550>.

If you feel that the amount that you earn is not commensurate with your skills or experience, you may be considering the next step up the career ladder. It has always been one of Schoolzone's aims to support teachers' professional development, and our latest round of site development means that you can:

1. Search for new career opportunities using our job search engine
2. Use the 'events and training' functionality to find relevant training to develop key skills related to your career. (Our recently updated search engine allows you to search for courses by key stage, subject area, or geographical location).

3. Take part in Schoolzone research as one of our educational panelists, which keeps you up-to-date on key issues in research, offers you relevant networking opportunities with other teachers AND earns you additional money in the short-term. For instance, during April 2008, we paid teachers £3050 for helping us with our research projects:

- ▶ £1050 for participating in focus groups
- ▶ £1100 for survey prize draws.
- ▶ £900 for completing other work

4. Carry out pre-interview preparation using our Education News service, and download evaluations of the most up-to-date resources and schemes for your subject area.

Details of forthcoming projects are flagged up on the website, and on this Newsletter.

Could Schoolzone be doing more to support teachers' professional development? Do you disagree with our views on educational issues? If you would like to have your say, email me at Melissa@schoolzone.co.uk.
